PROSPECTUS.

GEOGRAPHY is admitted to be, of all sciences, one of the most pleasing, and, at the same time, the most useful: it is of almost universal concern; persons of every rank and situation in life, are more or less interested in, and reap advantage from, an acquaintance with it. While it is indispensably necessary to the Statesman, the Merchant, the Mariner, and the Traveller, it likewise furnishes abundant matter for investigation to the Philosopher; assists the Divine in understanding and explaining many parts of the Holy Writ, that, without its aid would be obscure and uninteresting; is necessary to the reader of history; and, indeed, to every one, who peruses the daily accounts of events, that are taking place in the different parts of the world, as even in our own country.

It has always formed a part of polite education; and has more or less engaged, at all times, the attention of mankind, but now it has become more particularly interesting; in consequence of the great and important events that have so recently taken place.

These considerations, have induced the publisher of this ATLAS to extend his original plan in order to make it more generally useful, by adding the maps of the different divisions of Europe, Asia and Africa, which are now engraved, in the same elegant manner of the maps hereinafter offered to the public, and of a corresponding size. The publisher flatters himself, that this Atlas is the most complete of the size ever published, and will be found to contain more accurate information, particularly of our own country, than any work of the kind ever offered; he has chosen the present size, not only on account of its being more portable than larger maps, but also, because hereby he is enabled to afford every necessary information at a moderate expense.
